

WINTERS BROS. WASTE SYSTEMS

Background

As the name suggests, the company is a family business with a deep history in the industry and a commitment to recycling and exceptional service. During the 1990's and 2000's, the family, led by Joe Winters, successfully built the largest solid waste management company on Long Island, New York.

Clairvest Partnership

In 2006, Joe Winters was looking for equity capital to support the next phase of growth in his business on Long Island. It was important to Joe that his family retain majority control of the company and he chose Clairvest as a partner because of our experience as constructive minority investors. Together, we aggressively grew the company to become the number one player on Long Island and successfully sold to a strategic buyer for a significant profit. Several years later, Joe and Sean Winters opportunistically acquired a struggling solid waste business in Connecticut and, after turning around its operations, invited Clairvest to partner again in order to help grow that business together in the coming years.

"Partnering with Clairvest in 2006 was an important step in growing our family company and selling it successfully. We partnered with them for the second time because we trust them and know that they will work alongside us to help achieve our goals once again."

- Joe Winters, CEO

Update

In 2013, Clairvest became a 49.9% partner with Joe and Sean Winters in their Connecticut based solid waste management operation. The company is growing in its market through both acquisitions and targeted organic growth programs across all lines of business.
